

Martin Luther King Jr. showed respect by writing an important speech called "I Have a Dream." The speech was about respect and equal rights for everyone in the world. He led peaceful protests because he was against segregation. Dr. King helped Rosa Parks by starting a bus boycott when Rosa Parks was sent to jail for sitting in a white person's seat. I respect Martin Luther King because he did hard work just to make freedom for everyone, and he accepted people's differences.

To begin with, respect is a gift every person deserves. To me, respect is being generous and treating people the way you want to be treated. Accepting people's differences is another way to show respect. Helping less fortunate people is important because they need to feel good about themselves. Helping friends with homework, doing chores around the house, and taking turns with everyone are all ways you can show respect.

Also, I respect my cousin because he is in the United States Army. One reason I respect him is because he protects our country, and he fights for freedom and justice for all Americans. He prepares for all types of emergencies. For instance, if there are people shooting at his base, my cousin does his best to keep everyone safe. I feel worried about him sometimes because I want him to be safe.

In addition, I show respect by helping my mom with my baby brother, doing the dishes, feeding my dog, and taking out the garbage. Respect is important to me because it shows people that I care. For instance, my brother and I have to watch my baby brother so my mom can make dinner.

In conclusion, respect is important because if we did not have it, we would not have positive attitudes. Martin Luther King was a very respectful man because he wanted equal rights for every American citizen by showing that we should be able to sit in the same seats and share water fountains no matter the person's skin color. He made life better for all of us.
